Mr Nick Parker

Global Head of Business Development and Partnerships, International Agency for the Prevention of Blindness, UK

Nick Parker is the Head of Development for the International Agency for the Prevention of Blindness (IAPB), a global organization based in London, UK that serves as a leading voice on vision health public policy and strategy.

Mr Parker came to vision health after an extensive career in the non-governmental organization sector, and brings a wide range of experience in impactful partnerships, marketing, and development strategy. Notably, he spent nearly two decades with the Scouts, a leading UK and global youth organization, where he led the development of outdoor learning and spearheaded cross-sector partnerships to build outdoor learning into school curriculums. He subsequently spent three years as the Director of Services at a leading literacy charity, where he worked to support young people struggling with reading and achieved a significant uptake in primary schools across the UK. Later, he was recruited by Raleigh International, a leading sustainable development charity, to lead a range of business development functions and fundraising across the organization, including supporting country offices in Nepal, Nicaragua, Borneo, and Tanzania.

In his role at the IAPB, Mr Parker supports and grows the organization's network of over 180 global members. He leads the organization's work with the private sector, and has built effective partnerships with leading sector brands that create mutually beneficial and impactful outcomes.
